Guest column

When President JIMMY CARTER said he was coming to Oak Ridge in 1978 after announcing he planned to defer the Breeder Reactor Project, his planned first stop was to visit Oak Ridge National Laboratory.

ORNL Director Herman Postma asked me to be responsible for his visit.

About a week before the visit, the Chief Secret Service guy arrived. He was very warm and cordial, often putting his arm around my shoulder, thanking me for what my team and I were doing to prepare for the visit. Then one day he put his hand on my shoulder and said, "Dan we've been checking into what you did while you were at Princeton and found that you smoked a lot of pot." I laughed (because that was clearly not true) and he said, "Okay, you passed the test."

He had me stand at the entrance to the auditorium where President CARTER was to give his speech and to recognize each person allowed to enter the auditorium by sight.

In preparing for the president's visit, I moved the chair from my office to where President CARTER would sit in the auditorium. Afterward I moved it back to my office and put a plaque on the back that read, "The seat of power. This chair was used by President CARTER on his visit to ORNL, May 22nd, 1978." It's probably still somewhere at ORNL. The plaque in front of where he sat read, "The President." It now sits in my office at home.

As it turned out, the president didn't arrive from the airport by helicopter, but by limousine. It pulled up in front of the entrance to ORNL and stopped. I was the person standing nearest the door, followed by Roger Hibbs, president of Union Carbide Nuclear Division, and the heads of each of the Oak Ridge installations.

Not realizing the first thing a politician does is stick out his hand, I had a split second to decide that it wasn't appropriate for me to shake his hand first, so I just waved him to the right and said, "I'd like you to meet our Union Carbide Nuclear Division President, Roger Hibbs."

Listening to JIMMY CARTER's funeral service on Jan. 9, a national day of mourning, I found myself choking up as they brought his casket into the cathedral. My emotion certainly wasn't because CARTER's life, at 100, had been cut short. He had lived out his calling as peacemaker, house builder, disease preventer and the like.

It was partly that I mourned the passing of a simpler time when he was president — before personal computers, before climate change, following the demoralization of Vietnam and the disillusionment of Watergate — when our country had a chance to find its moral balance. After the deceptions of Richard Nixon and LBJ, CARTER represented a quite different character. A plainspoken peanut farmer from Plains, Georgia, he was a man of faith seeking to speak truth and to embody a decency that had been eroding in our national life.

To carry out the office of U.S. president and at the same time live out Gospel values was a tall, if not impossible, order for CARTER. Compared to the bravado of his successor, Ronald Reagan, CARTER could appear to many as weak and indecisive. While Reagan, a charismatic actor, looked more confident as president walking on the world stage, CARTER seemed more at home in rural Georgia, surrounded by the ordinary folks of his home town.

Where other countries have believed their kings were ordained by God to lead their people, from its beginning the United States has had a tradition of separating church and state. Beginning with Washington, it was understood that our president would not wield the autocratic power of a king and was chosen for leadership not by God but by the people. And yet, our people have always tended to look to the president for moral and spiritual leadership, especially in times of great peril such as the Civil War, Great Depression and world wars.

Prophets in ancient Israel such as Isaiah and Jeremiah or in modern times such as Martin Luther King Jr. have not been disposed to be administrators or praisers of kings but rather to be invoking the deeper calling of nations to righteousness and repentance.

CARTER had the soul of a prophet and, while seeking to stay within the bounds of his secular office, would at times speak prophetically, as when warning our country of an impending energy crisis or stepping into the breach of warring countries in the Mideast to seek peaceful settlement. He was a wise counselor in many matters but only reached his full embodiment as spiritual leader when he did not hold political office, when he was free to move about the world in the cause of fighting hunger and disease, building homes and seeking peace.

CARTER demonstrated how faith matters not just in how we lead our everyday lives — as he did as a devoted family man and Sunday school teacher back home — but how faith matters in public life. That is, how we treat recent immigrants, how we protect the right of all citizens to vote, how we may choose to give large amounts of tax dollars to weapons of war while cutting back on aid to low-income families with children. Faith matters to whom we give allegiance — to someone who seeks to wield power by putting down individuals and groups of people labeled as enemy or to a higher authority which seeks peace, justice, unity and reconciliation.

So I suppose it was not JIMMY CARTER I was mourning on Jan. 9 so much as the common decency he embodied and its diminishment in our national life. Far more than in his era, we have witnessed not only a loss of decorum but a meanness in public discourse on the part of elected officials and citizens alike. I was mourning the increasing number of Americans who seek security with guns, look to a “strong man” rather than a spiritual source for guidance and have become more willing to use the divisive language of hate to vilify neighbors near and far.

NAS OCEANA, Va. — Members of Strike Fighter Squadron (VFA-32) were part of this month's missing man flyover in honor of President JIMMY CARTER, during his funeral ceremonies in Plains, Georgia. During that formation, a single aircraft breaks away from the formation and soars skyward. This symbolizes the departure of life from the ranks. A specially decorated jet was one of the 21 aircraft taking part in that salute.

According to his Navy biography, CARTER graduated from the U.S. Naval Academy in 1946 with distinction. He was assigned to the USS Wyoming, a submarine (SSK-1), and he served with the Naval Reactors Branch, U.S. Atomic Energy Commission, Washington, D.C., rising to the rank of Lieutenant. He was honorably discharged in 1953.

Cmdr. Jason Hoch, commanding officer of VFA-32, was part of that flyover.

"It was a great honor to be able to be a part of that, not only for a former president, for a former naval officer as well," he said. "It was very special moment in my career."

The aircraft in the flyover from VFA-32 had a special paint job. Crew members painted part of the jet to look like an American flag waving as it flies through the sky.

"That was our coming home from deployment, and we knew it had to fly in president CARTER's memorial," said MCPO Megan Newberry, VFA-32.

Article 8: Carter Center reports 14 Human Guinea Worm cases in 2024

Article URL:

<https://www.walb.com/2025/01/31/carter-center-reports-14-human-guinea-worm-cases-2024/>

Processed Text:

ATLANTA, Ga. (WALB) - The CARTER Center reports that the late U.S. President JIMMY CARTER's goal of eradicating Guinea worm disease remains on track, with 14 provisional human cases reported worldwide in 2024.

The 14 reported cases in 2024 aligns with some of the lowest annual totals of human cases ever reported, following 14 cases in 2023 and 13 cases in 2022. This is improvement from when The CARTER Center assumed leadership of the global Guinea Worm Eradication Program in 1986,. At the time, an estimated 3.5 million human cases occurred annually in 21 countries in Africa and Asia.

The campaign has reduced the disease by more than 99.99% and averted more than 100 million cases of this devastating disease among the world's most marginalized and neglected populations.

Eight of the 14 provisional human cases reported in 2024 occurred in Chad; the other six were in South Sudan. Angola, Cameroon, Ethiopia, and Mali reported zero human cases. A small number of 2024 specimens are waiting to be processed. If testing confirms they are Guinea worms, interventions will be further intensified, investigations will continue to identify case origins, and the provisional case total will be adjusted.

"A single worm can cause multiple new cases the following year, and we're actively preventing outbreaks in some of the most challenging and complex environments," said Dr. Kashef Ijaz, CARTER Center vice president of health programs.

In the six African countries, reported infections in animals declined 26%, from 885 in 2023 to 654 in 2024. Chad reduced Guinea worm infections by 43% (from 497 to 281), its fifth consecutive year of improvement. Reductions in animal infections in Chad, Angola, and Mali were partially offset by an increase in Cameroon.

“The low provisional numbers show that communities’ unwavering commitment to reaching zero and interventions to reduce human suffering are working,” said Adam Weiss, director of the CARTER Center’s Guinea Worm Eradication Program.

All figures for the water-borne disease, humans and animals, are provisional until officially confirmed by the countries at the eradication campaign’s global annual meeting, typically in April. Guinea worm is poised to become the second human disease in history to be eradicated, following smallpox, as well as the first parasitic disease and the first without a medicine or vaccine. Local mobilization and community-based behavioral change are key drivers of success.

For a disease to be declared eradicated, every country in the world must be certified free of human and animal infection, even countries where transmission is never known to have taken place. To date, the World Health Organization has certified 200 countries free of Guinea worm (Dracunculus medinensis); only six have not been certified.

The CARTER Center leads the global campaign, working closely with national ministries of health and a variety of global institutions, including the WHO, the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, UNICEF, and other vital partners. Many generous foundations, corporations, governments, and individuals have made the work to eradicate Guinea worm disease possible. Learn more: <https://cartercenter.org/guineawormwarriors>

White House celebrates JIMMY CARTER

Is President Biden trying to show off his youth?

The White House celebrated former President JIMMY CARTER’s milestone centennial birthday Tuesday with a giant “100” sign on the North Lawn during a rainy day in the nation’s capital — making the 81-year-old current president seem young by comparison.

CARTER, the oldest living president, is the first of his peers to ever reach centenarian status. The White House display also featured a “Happy Birthday President CARTER” banner adorning the triple digits on the North Lawn.

“Your hopeful vision of our country, your commitment to a better world, and your unwavering belief in the power of human goodness continues to be a guiding light for all of us,” Biden said in a video honoring the 39th president.

“I admire you so darn much.”

The “100” tributary display is set to remain at the White House through the end of the day to honor CARTER, who served as commander-in-chief between 1977 and 1981.

CARTER has been in hospice care since February 2023 and made a rare public appearance last November at his wife Rosalynn’s memorial service. The two had been married for 77 years. She was 96.

Biden, 81, took note of Rosalynn's absence in his birthday wishes to his predecessor.

"We know this is the first birthday without Rosalynn. It's bittersweet, but we also know she's always with you. She's in your heart. She'll never go away, she may be gone, but she's always going to be with you," Biden said.

The outgoing president further lauded CARTER as one of "the most influential statesmen in our history."

CARTER had famously helped broker the Camp David peace accords, paving the way for Egypt and Israel to formally recognize one another after years of bitter conflict.

In the present day, the Middle East is once again plunging into disarray, with Israel and Hezbollah exchanging fire and US officials bracing for possible action from Iran.

Former President Barack Obama also celebrated CARTER's century status.

CARTER became the oldest living president in 2019, surpassing the next-closest former commander-in-chief, President George H.W. Bush, who lived until 94.

The next-closest were former Presidents Gerald Ford and Ronald Reagan, who both died at the age of 93.

Biden is the oldest sitting president — though former President Donald Trump, 78, could rip that title away from him if he wins the Nov. 5 election and serves a full term.

President Biden praised JIMMY CARTER as one of the greatest statesmen in the country's history. ABC

CARTER is "excited" to vote for Vice President Kamala Harris in the Nov. 5 election, according to his eldest grandson, Jason CARTER, who lamented that the former president is not as mobile as he once was.

"He's very limited in what he can do," Jason told CBS. "He can't talk on the phone."

Processed Text:

Former President James "Jimmy" Earl CARTER Jr., who served as the 39th President of the United States from 1977 to 1981, died on Dec. 29. He was 100-years-old.

His tenure was marked by many international and domestic turbulent events that continue to influence the present day.

During his presidency, the Cold War was in full swing, forcing CARTER to balance his roles of humble peanut farmer and conductor of the international shadow war. However, two events from this era have continued to reverberate into the present.

On Sept. 5, 1978, CARTER brokered the Camp David Accords, an agreement between Egypt and Israel. It established diplomatic relations between the two nations, returned land previously seized by the Israelis to the Egyptians and created a framework for negotiations for full autonomy of the West Bank and Gaza within five years.

Domestically, one of CARTER's lasting legacies is the Mariel Boatlift of 1980, especially in Miami.

Following the revolution on the island, in the 1970s, thousands of Cubans left the country.

At the facility, refugees faced poor living conditions and racial prejudice. On June

1, a protest broke out that led to 62 being injured and 46 arrested. It was later determined that administrative delays led to the inhospitable environment.

The riot and the inability of the presidential administration to meet the movement would go on to define CARTER's legacy.

In 1984, all Marielitos received permanent legal status, and in 1986, under the Cuban Adjustment Act of 1966, they were allowed to apply for permanent residency.

With the death of CARTER and the return of President Donald Trump, there are echoes of the past in the current day.

On his second inauguration day, Jan. 20, as the 47th President of the United States, Trump signed nearly 30 executive orders. Among the proposals: suspension of refugee admissions, citizenship denial for U.S.-born children of non-U.S. citizens or lawful permanent residents, and construction of a barrier at the country's southern border.

LISBON - Portugal's President Marcelo Rebelo de Sousa says he's planning to attend the funeral of former President JIMMY CARTER, who passed away Sunday, Dec. 29, at the age of 100.

The state funeral will be held on Jan. 9 in Washington, D.C., according to a presidential declaration by President Joe Biden.

In a prepared statement, President Rebelo de Sousa paid tribute to CARTER's significant contributions to democracy and human rights, emphasizing his "symbolic support" for Portugal's democratic consolidation during the historic crucial period following the 1974 Carnation Revolution.

President CARTER visited Portugal in 1980

President CARTER visited Lisbon, Portugal, on June 26, 1980 at the invitation of President António Ramalho Eanes.

The visit, which lasted about six hours, provided an opportunity for meetings between the two presidents and between President CARTER and Prime Minister Francisco Sá Carneiro.

According to a joint statement issued at the conclusion of the state visit, President CARTER noted with satisfaction the close relations between the U.S. and Portugal, based on long-standing ties of friendship, common commitment to democratic values, and partnership in the NATO Alliance.

President CARTER and his hosts had the opportunity to discuss several international issues, including the situation in Afghanistan, Iran, and the Middle East. They also addressed new forms of coordination and consultation among the Western countries as well as US-Portuguese cooperation in enhancing western security, including development and conservation of energy resources.

“President CARTER welcomed the constructive insights and suggestions which President Eanes and Prime Minister Sá Carneiro offered regarding critical issues affecting East-West and North-South relationships. In particular, President CARTER praised Portugal’s efforts to strengthen ties with Africa, and especially with the Lusophone African states. They agreed that it would be useful to intensify U.S.-Portuguese consultations on ways in which both countries can work for greater peace, freedom, and prosperity,” according to the joint statement.

Upon CARTER's death at age 100 this past December, the house will be turned into a museum. CARTER will be laid to rest on the property. “The Carters loved Plains. They built their house back in 1961 and they came back to that same house and that’s where they both passed away,” Jill Stuckey, a CARTER family friend and National Parks Superintendent, said.

The Carters left their home to the National Park Service, where it will be part of the JIMMY CARTER National Historical Park. Per the NPS, the park, which opened in 1987, “interprets President CARTER’s life and presidency in relation to Plains, Georgia, and preserve the resources associated with that story. The park includes President CARTER's boyhood farm and home, the high school that President and Mrs. CARTER attended, the CARTER Home and Garden (closed to the public), and the railroad depot that served as the headquarters for his presidential campaign.”

While the CARTER Home and Garden is currently closed to the public, it will eventually be open. The NPS said the home may be open as soon as this summer.

“It sort of completes the story, if you will,” Mike Litterst, a National Park Service spokesperson, said. “We have the Boyhood Farm where President CARTER lived. We have a high school that sort of shaped his character and who he became. The campaign headquarters, where he launched his national presidential ambitions, and now the opportunity to see the final resting place of the president and Mrs. CARTER.”

President JIMMY CARTER, who earlier this year became the first former Commander-in-Chief to live to be 100-years-old, has died, the CARTER Center confirmed.

He “died peacefully Sunday, Dec. 29, at his home in Plains, Georgia, surrounded by his family,” the center said.

CARTER served one term as the 39th president from 1977 to 1981. As the former Governor of Georgia, he was known for his rabid support of the civil rights movement and the pardon of Vietnam War draft dodgers.

He and his longtime wife Rosalynn, who died last year aged 96, were both known for philanthropy and humanitarian efforts in his post-presidency.

CARTER was placed into hospice care last year.

This is a developing story. Check back for updates.

JIMMY CARTER and Rosalynn CARTER (née Smith) were married 77 years. The two met essentially when Rosalynn was born—their families were neighbors—and started dating when Jimmy attended the U.S. Naval Academy. They would marry in 1946, in their hometown of Plains, Georgia, and have four children: Jack (b. 1947), James III, a.k.a. Chip (b. 1950), Donnell Jeffery (b. 1952) and Amy (b. 1967). Rosalynn played a key role in her husband's political career, and Jimmy called her his most trusted advisor.

In memory of former president JIMMY CARTER, who passed away at age 100 on December 29, 2024, and Rosalynn, who passed away in November 2023 at age 96, here, take a look at the best photos of Jimmy and Rosalynn through the years:

Article 19: Jimmy Carter and the sad saga of a 9-ton Northern California peanut

In the spring of 1977, President JIMMY CARTER, the former peanut farmer who had just taken office, was offered a big gift — if you can call it that — from the misty Northern California coast.

A 9-ton redwood peanut.

The roughly hewn goober had been strapped to the back of a logging truck, hauled across the country and parked near the White House. It was offered to CARTER amid a protest by loggers angry and anxious about his administration's plans to expand Redwood National Park along California's northern coast and eliminate their jobs.

Alas, the CARTER White House rejected the peanut.

It was trucked back to the Humboldt County hamlet of Orick, where, for nearly half a century, it stood unmarked in a gas station parking lot, its story fading into obscurity as the town struggled and shrank.

But in Humboldt County, the saga of the poor old peanut — which was obliterated in 2023 when a car slammed into it — has drawn renewed attention since CARTER died last month at age 100.

Two days after CARTER's death, the front page of the Times-Standard newspaper, just below his obituary, carried the headline: "Former president outlived the Orick 'peanut.'"

At the Shoreline Fuel Mart, the longtime home of the languishing legume, an employee answered a phone call from a Times reporter this week with a sigh, saying: "Everybody keeps calling us about this."

CARTER, whose extended public farewell concludes Thursday with a funeral at the Washington National Cathedral, was posthumously praised by the National Park Service for his "pivotal role in the story of Redwood National Park," which he nearly doubled in size in 1978 despite heavy opposition from the timber industry.

"This critical expansion included watersheds surrounding old-growth forests, ensuring they would be safeguarded for future generations to cherish," Redwood National and State Parks officials said. "President CARTER's vision extended beyond the redwoods. His efforts remind us that leadership involves not only addressing the challenges of our time but also nurturing the earth for future generations."

The creation — and CARTER's expansion — of Redwood National Park has long been a touchy subject along California's rural, economically depressed North Coast, where the once-thriving logging industry cratered over the last half-century.

Virtually all coast redwoods, the world's tallest trees, grow in a narrow, fog-laden strip stretching from Big Sur to southern Oregon. By the time President Lyndon B. Johnson signed the legislation establishing Redwood National Park just outside Orick in 1968, more than 90% of the original redwoods had been chopped down.

In the decade after the park's creation, logging continued just outside its boundaries. Water and sediment from clear-cut land flowed into the park, damaging the protected space.

In 1977, the CARTER administration proposed adding 48,000 acres to the park, with the new protected land — much of it already logged — to be purchased by the government.

Lumber production and employment had already been declining, in part because most old-growth trees had been cut and because newly mechanized mills required fewer workers. But in Humboldt County, loggers railed against the proposed park expansion, which would lead to the elimination of at least 1,000 jobs.

They carved the protest peanut and strapped it to a logging truck alongside a sign reading: "It may be peanuts to you but it's jobs to us."

That May, two dozen logging trucks — including one carrying the peanut — took off from Humboldt County, horns blasting, and headed toward Washington, D.C., where they were joined by around 400 demonstrators from the West Coast.

Asst. Secretary of the Interior Robert Herbst and White House staffer Scott Burnett met the trucks near the Washington Monument. They declined to accept the peanut, calling the carving an inappropriate use of ancient redwood.

CARTER signed the park expansion bill the next year.

The population of Orick, home to more than 2,000 people in the 1960s at the peak of commercial logging operations, plummeted to what is now about 300 residents.

CARTER to be honored with events in Georgia, Washington

(The Hill) – Former President CARTER will be honored with public observances in both Georgia and Washington, D.C., in the coming days, following his death on Sunday.

He will be interred in Plains, Ga., according to the CARTER Center.

Details on events are still being ironed out, handled by the Joint Task Force-National Capital Region.

President Biden said in March 2023 that CARTER had asked the sitting president to deliver his eulogy when the time came.

“I spent time with JIMMY CARTER, and it’s finally caught up with him, but they found a way to keep him going for a lot longer than they anticipated because they found a breakthrough,” Biden said at a Democratic National Committee fundraiser.

The CARTER Center has encouraged anyone wishing to remember CARTER to visit an official tribute website, at www.jimmycartertribute.org, home to a condolence book and commemorations of his life.

The center also said the CARTER family has asked that in lieu of flowers, donations be made to The CARTER Center, 453 John Lewis Freedom Parkway N.E., Atlanta, GA 30307.

As mourners gather today to pay tribute to the late JIMMY CARTER, an essay he wrote in The Bitter Southerner about the meaning of home in 2021 has resurfaced online.

“Home is a complicated idea. Is it the physical bricks and mortar in which you live, or is it a feeling? Is it the people you see each day who contribute to the feeling of belonging that comes with ‘home’? Can you feel at home anywhere?”

he began the essay. He then mused on his boyhood home, which is a national historical park, and his time living on naval bases in Hawaii and Connecticut.

After living in Atlanta during his time as the governor of Georgia and Washington, D.C. during his term as president, he was “involuntarily retired from the White House,” when he lost his bid for reelection.

CARTER writes, “we returned to Plains to a peanut business and mounds of debt. We added an office to our home from which I could work, writing the first of many books and restoring our family business.” He would go on to author 32 books during his lifetime.

He then writes about the CARTER Center, and his time traveling around to 146 countries “promoting human rights, health, and peace for all. I have been fortunate to have seen the world, and I am grateful for the many experiences I have had.”

Yet, home, for CARTER, is always Plains. “The objective has been for us to be at home in Plains as much as possible. I always have felt drawn to the South,” he writes. “I visit our family land, our ponds, our town.”

The Washington Post - Getty Images

He concluded, “For me, as Rosalynn and I approach our 75th wedding anniversary coming up in July, my home is wherever she is, whether in South Georgia or South Sudan. Holding her hand, reading our Bible together each night, falling asleep next to her, that is my home.”

Today, CARTER will be laid to rest at their home in Plains underneath a willow tree alongside his beloved Rosalynn, who passed away last year.

Former President JIMMY CARTER and his late wife Rosalynn CARTER never moved from the modest Georgia home they built in 1961 — even after their four years in the White House.

The ranch house, located in their hometown of Plains, in Sumter County, is the burial site for Rosalynn, who died in November 2023 at the age of 96.

The Carters deeded the property to the National Park Service with the understanding the grounds would be turned into a museum after their deaths.

Jimmy, who served as the U.S. president from 1977 to 1981, and Rosalynn, a lifelong mental health and human rights advocate, maintained an unpretentious lifestyle that included flying commercial and taking regular walks down Church Street, the town's main drag. Jimmy taught Sunday school at Plains' Maranatha Baptist Church for decades.

In 2011, the couple's grandson Jason CARTER told Rolling Stone, "To me, the thing I admire most about my grandfather and grandmother is that they've done everything they can to stay normal people."

"They built their house in the 1960s, and they almost haven't changed a thing," Jason added. "They were super excited — legitimately excited! — when the Dollar General store opened in Plains. They buy their clothes there."

"My grandparents, their microwave is from 1985," Jason, a former state senator, added. "It goes tick tick tick tick! It takes 12 minutes ticking down to pop popcorn, because why would you buy a new microwave? The point is that nothing is easy, and why should it be?"

Jimmy grew up on his family's peanut farm in the community of Archery, a few miles from Plains. They didn't have running water until he was 11 and only got electricity three years later.

"The greatest day in my life was not being inaugurated president, [and] it wasn't even marrying Rosalynn — it was when they turned the electricity on," Jimmy said, according to the New York Times.

In August 2023, another grandson of the couple, Josh CARTER, told PEOPLE that the Plains home was "quiet and calm" these days, adding that since Jimmy began hospice, there was "always somebody at the house" to keep his grandparents company.

The former president and first lady shared sons John William "Jack," James Earl "Chip," Donnel Jeffrey "Jeff" and daughter Amy CARTER. Between their four adult children, there are 22 grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

The funeral service of the late President CARTER on Thursday at Washington, D.C.'s National Cathedral brought together all five living presidents together in one location.

The service comes as President Biden declared Thursday a National Day of Mourning for the 39th president, who died Dec. 29 at the age of 100.

Biden delivered a eulogy.

JIMMY CARTER, 39Th President Of The United States, Dead At 100

"Throughout his life, he showed us what it means to be a practitioner of good works and a good and faithful servant of God, and of the people," Biden said. "And today, many think he was from a bygone era, but in reality he saw well into the future. A White Southern Baptist, who led the civil rights, a decorated Navy veteran who brokered peace, was a brilliant nuclear engineer who led a nuclear nonproliferation, a hard-working farmer who championed conservation and clean energy, and the president who redefined the relationship with a vice president."

Read On The Fox News App

Biden praised the strength of character with which CARTER lived his life, saying he showed the strength to understand "that everyone should be treated with dignity and respect."

"That's the definition of a good life, a life JIMMY CARTER lived during his 100 years. To young people, to anyone in search of meaning and purpose, study the power of JIMMY CARTER's example. I miss him, but I take solace in knowing that his beloved Rosalynn are reunited again. To the entire CARTER family. Thank you, and I mean this sincerely, for sharing them both with America and the world."

Ahead of the service, Trump was seen shaking hands with his former vice president, Mike Pence. Obama was seated next to Trump and the pair were seen shaking hands and chatting cordially.

Also in attendance were Sen. Dave McCormick, Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, Vice President-elect JD Vance, Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh, former first son Hunter Biden and former Vice President Al Gore.

In addition to Biden, other speakers included CARTER's grandsons, Joshua CARTER and Jason CARTER; Steven Ford, who read a eulogy written by his father, former President Gerald Ford; and Ted Mondale, the son of former Vice President Walter F. Mondale, who also read his father's tribute to CARTER.

Jason CARTER remembered his grandparents' humble lifestyle, though added that he knows "we are not here because he was just a regular guy."

"As you've heard from the other speakers, his political life and his presidency, for me, was not just ahead of its time. It was prophetic. He had the courage and strength to stick to his principles even when they were politically unpopular," the grandson said.

Supporters and friends of President CARTER will attend his funeral Thursday at Washington, D.C.'s National Cathedral.

Tributes began Jan. 4, when a motorcade carried CARTER's body through his hometown of Plains, Georgia, before heading to Atlanta and the CARTER Presidential Center, where family and loved ones paid tribute.

An 'Extraordinary Man': Former President CARTER Lies In State At Capitol Ahead Of State Funeral

CARTER then lay in repose at the CARTER Center and then the Capitol.

CARTER, the former governor of Georgia, won the presidency in 1976. He was guided by his devout Christian faith and determined to restore faith in government after Watergate and Vietnam. But after four years in office and impaired by stubborn, double-digit inflation and high unemployment, he was roundly defeated for re-election by Ronald Reagan.

While in the White House, CARTER established full diplomatic relations with China and led the negotiation of a nuclear limitation treaty with the Soviet Union. Domestically, he led several conservation efforts, showing the same love of nature as president as he did as a young farmer in Plains.

CARTER lived out the rest of his years in the unassuming ranch house he'd built with his wife in 1961, building homes with Habitat for Humanity and making forays back into foreign policy when he felt it was needed, a tendency that made his relationship with the presidents' club, at times, tense.

JIMMY CARTER, Democratic presidential candidate, and his wife, Rosalynn, share a moment aboard his campaign plane.

He earned a living in large part by writing books — 32 in all — but didn't cash in on seven-figure checks for giving speeches or take any cushy board jobs as other presidents have.

In his spare time, CARTER, a deeply religious man who served as a deacon for the Maranatha Baptist Church of Plains, enjoyed fishing, running and woodworking.

CARTER is survived by his four children, 11 grandchildren and 13 great-grandchildren.

Article 27: A reflection on Jimmy Carter vis a vis Ronald Reagan

Publication Date: 2025-01-31

Article URL:

<https://forwardky.com/a-reflection-on-jimmy-carter-vis-a-vis-ronald-reagan-tag-commentary/>

Processed Text:

In marking the passing of President JIMMY CARTER, I'm reminded there are some who would and do perpetuate the myth JIMMY CARTER was a great failure – and the myth that his successor, Ronald Reagan, was a great success. Nothing could be further from the truth.

In 1980 I was one of those who voted for Ronald Reagan and against JIMMY CARTER. Truthfully, more 'against,' as I, like millions of Americans, was angry the Iran Hostage crisis had not been dealt with in a strong, military manner, and thus blamed CARTER. I celebrated election night 1980 as the electoral map became almost solid red. I know now my choice was wrong, both on foreign as well as domestic/fiscal policy.

The Iran hostage crisis was the single greatest factor in CARTER's loss. Reagan's campaign recognized it and exploited it. Certainly, Americans were extremely frustrated. I was frustrated and angry. But the hostages were in danger of being murdered by Iranian militants. CARTER knew it and he approached the issue with due caution. Ultimately, and after much anguish, the hostages were returned on Reagan's inauguration day. Correlation, not causation, gave Reagan credit for their return. But CARTER deserves credit they were all returned and alive.

There exists a clear contrast between Reagan and CARTER in response to such events that exposes these myths. Think the Iran hostage crisis was bad and CARTER was weak? Look to Reagan and Beirut, Lebanon in the 1980s, and compare the body count: an embassy bombing and then 240 dead marines in the barracks bombing; multiple hostages taken and held for years; CIA Bureau Chief William Francis Buckley executed by Hezbollah; Marine Colonel William Higgins (a Danville, KY native) hanged by the terrorists – and Reagan was impotent. The US withdrew from Lebanon. US retaliation consisted primarily of a bad Chuck Norris movie. But we did invade Grenada (memorialized by Clint Eastwood in his movie, 'Heartbreak Ridge'). Hooooaaah.

Reagan's major 'accomplishment' that is used to bolster his myth was his presence when the Soviet Union collapsed. Presence doesn't equal being the catalyst; the collapse was the culmination of decades of Soviet failure and American leadership. That's not to minimize his own efforts, but Reagan continues to be credited with that event by myth purveyors.

Then there's domestic and fiscal policy. In 1981, when Reagan and Bush came in to office, unemployment was at 7.5%. When George H.W. Bush left twelve years later, in 1993, unemployment was 7.5%.

Remember "It's the economy, stupid?" Unemployment raged to over 9% and sometimes 10% for most of Reagan's first term. CARTER, on the other hand, 'only' saw a high of 7.8%, and that was for about a month. Comparison of Ford's numbers before CARTER, and Reagan's after, show CARTER had a much better record on unemployment. Inflation did increase with oil prices and money supply in the CARTER term, but that was inherited from Ford, ran through the CARTER years, was exacerbated by the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, and continued into Reagan's administration.

CARTER, having inherited a years-long post-Vietnam economic circumstance, oversaw the Fed's tough counter-recession measure of raising interest rates. Similarly, Biden did the same in his term when rates were raised. In the latter circumstance, this was an action that should have occurred in 2016-2018 in a more measured and less traumatic manner, instead of unnecessary tax cuts and exploded deficits in Trump's term that resulted in inflation post-Covid. Regardless, the Fed's actions did increase the cost of financing homes and cars in CARTER's term, much as it has today in Biden's term.

CARTER left Reagan a national debt of $900 billion in 1981. Reagan/Bush exploded that debt to almost $4.3 trillion by the end of George H.W. Bush's single term. The '87 market crash and later S&L scandal, in a lesser way, mirror George W. Bush's 2008 catastrophe. Reagan's supply side economics, aka Trickle Down, in the usual rinse/repeat/fail pattern, failed then and fails now to benefit the American public. The middle class particularly suffered as a result and continues to do so.

That Reagan was so accomplished is a myth. That CARTER was such a bad president is a myth. Both should be examined for what they were, and myths should give way to fact. JIMMY CARTER earned and deserves far better.

Nation Pauses To Mourn Former President JIMMY CARTER An official day of mourning declared as flags remain at half-staff across the country.

Flags across the nation are being flown at half-staff as the United States mourns the passing of former President JIMMY CARTER, who died on December 29, 2024, at the age of 100. The proclamation from President Joe Biden directing this display of respect has initiated official ceremonies and reflection on CARTER's significant role in American history.

CARTER, who served from 1977 to 1981 and had been the oldest living ex-president, passed away peacefully at his home in Plains, Georgia. Following his death, Biden declared January 9, 2025, as a national day of mourning, honoring CARTER's contributions to the nation. Flags at the White House, public buildings, military posts, and U.S. embassies will be flown at half-staff for 30 days, contingent upon CARTER's death.

The protocol for half-staff displays signifies public sorrow and respect when former presidents pass away. President Dwight D. Eisenhower established this tradition, stating it is appropriate to fly the flag at half-staff for 30 days after the death of such notable figures. Biden's proclamation also reinforces the significance of honoring CARTER's legacy both as president and as a humanitarian.

CARTER's funeral activity started on January 4, 2025, commencing with ceremonies at his hometown, where the public paid their respects. His remains were then transported to Washington, D.C., lying in state at the U.S. Capitol Rotunda for public viewing from January 7 to January 9. During this time, citizens were invited to pay homage to the former president throughout the designated hours.

On the National Day of Mourning, January 9, CARTER's funeral service is scheduled to be held at Washington National Cathedral, attended by numerous dignitaries including President-elect Donald Trump. Trump previously expressed respect for CARTER via his social media platform, stating, "While I strongly disagreed with him philosophically and politically, I also realized he truly loved and respected our country and all it stands for."

Trump's comments came as he discussed the flag situation, drawing public attention as it coincides with his inauguration set for January 20, 2025. He expressed concerns over the flag being flown at half-staff during his inauguration, stating, "Nobody wants to see this, and no American can be happy about it." This sentiment has sparked discussions among both Trump supporters and opposition, drawing mixed reactions.

White House Press Secretary Karine Jean-Pierre firmly responded to inquiries concerning potential changes to flag protocols during the inauguration, confirming, "no." Under current regulations, the flags will remain at half-staff, symbolizing mourning for CARTER, even on the day of Trump's inauguration.

The historical precedence surrounding the flag's status during presidential inaugurations received attention. The only similar scenario occurred for President Richard Nixon, whose flags were also flown at half-staff during his second inauguration on January 20, 1973, due to the mourning of former President Harry S. Truman's death, which occurred just days prior.

Trump is faced with the option of temporarily overriding Biden's order as president, similar to how Nixon raised the flag after the death of President Lyndon B. Johnson for one day to honor American prisoners of war. The complicated intertwining of mourning and ceremonial respect reflects the challenges and diverging sentiments within the political sphere, particularly during transitions of power.

While Trump's sentiments over the upcoming inauguration coincide with national mourning for CARTER, it is evident this peculiar juxtaposition creates challenges for both the authorities overseeing the flags and the collective public mood. The legacy of JIMMY CARTER remains undeniable amid these discourses, as he is remembered for his extensive humanitarian efforts and commitment to democracy, significantly influencing global and domestic policies.

Public figures and average citizens alike continue to reflect on CARTER's legacy and contributions as they participate in commemorative moments through flag displays and memorial services. CARTER's life has been marked not just by his presidency but also by his post-presidential initiatives geared toward global peace and health efforts, showcasing the impact of his work beyond his White House years.

Overall, the nation stands united during this period of mourning. Flags at half-staff represent not only respect for CARTER's life and services but also the reflective nature of American history intertwined with the depths of political life. The juxtaposition of Trump's inauguration and CARTER's memorial underlines the importance of respect during the transition—even amid differing political beliefs and sentiments.

Nation Prepares To Honor JIMMY CARTER With State Funeral Tributes pour from political leaders celebrating CARTER's dedication to human rights and service.

JIMMY CARTER, the 39th President of the United States, passed away on December 29 at the age of 100, marking the end of not only his lifetime but also extraordinarily impactful public service spanning over 75 years. The nation is now poised to honor his legacy with state funeral arrangements scheduled for January 9, 2025, as tributes and remembrances flow from leaders across the political spectrum.

President Joe Biden, who described CARTER as "a remarkable leader who represented the most fundamental human values," announced the state funeral set to be held at the CARTER Presidential Center. He stated, "We would all do well to be a little more like JIMMY CARTER," indicating the deep respect and admiration the current leadership holds for the former president.

To honor this moment, flags across the nation will fly at half-staff for 30 days per tradition following the death of a president. The state funeral will include multiple events: beginning on January 4 with a motorcade heading to CARTER's boyhood home in Plains, Georgia, moving on to public viewings at the U.S. Capitol, and concluding with funeral services on January 9 when the CARTER family will attend private ceremonies back at home.

CARTER's funeral will offer opportunities for the public to pay their respects, reflecting the steadfast admiration many have for him. Vice President Kamala Harris honored him, stating, "His life and legacy continue to inspire me — and will inspire generations to come." This sentiment is echoed remarkably among leaders including Barack Obama and members of the King family, underlining CARTER's unwavering commitment to civil rights and democracy.

With his passing, various leaders have taken to social media and public statements to reflect on the former president's character. Notably, Martin Luther King III released poignant words about CARTER, noting, "While history may have been hard on President CARTER at times, today, he is remembered as a global human rights leader." This legacy echoes throughout not only American history but also on the global stage where CARTER's initiatives for peace and humanitarian efforts set precedent.

CARTER's long-standing dedication to service was intertwined with his commitment to racial equity. His efforts to diversify the federal judiciary and champion civil rights made lasting impacts, forming bonds with leaders like Martin Luther King Jr. His work remains foundational as the nation grapples with issues of equity and justice.

Reflecting on his life accomplishments, CARTER's 1978 negotiation of the Camp David Accords between Israel and Egypt remains one of the significant milestones of his administration. He established the CARTER Center, which focuses on democracy and health around the globe, helping to monitor elections across over 100 countries and reinforcing health initiatives worldwide.

The public will get several opportunities to observe tributes through public viewings and processional routes during the funeral days leading to January 9. With Biden already referring to CARTER as "a dear friend," it's evident how deeply personal his loss resonates not just with the President but with many Americans who felt the impact of CARTER's leadership.

CARTER's departure follows just over one year after losing his beloved wife Rosalynn, showcasing the extraordinary challenges he faced as he faithfully engaged with the public and continued attending memorials throughout her illness. Despite battling his own health issues, he displayed resilience, joining events and witnessing the grand celebrations of his historic 100th birthday.

Even amid personal challenges and the weighty legacy of the presidency, CARTER's steadfast belief in humanity, kindness, and integrity shone through. Biden characterized him as someone who never stopped being "a Sunday school teacher." A man whose life was void of pretense carries forth messages of humility and human connection.

The tributes, reminiscing, and memorials for CARTER will resonate throughout the nation. His character, dedication, and contribution to the country's moral and ethical standing will remain significant as future generations continue to learn from his storied life. We can all reflect on who he was and the extensive work he accomplished, shaping policy and public discourse for decades.

Indeed, President JIMMY CARTER's life will continue to inspire as many recognize what he stood for: peace, service, and love for humanity, emphasizing relying on each other and working collectively for common good. His funeral not only serves as ending for his transformative life but as the landmark of education for society to learn what genuine service means.

During its years in action, the boat became the backdrop of many pivotal moments.

Here's something you may not know about former President JIMMY CARTER: He ended the expensive custom of each president getting access to a lavish luxury yacht.

CARTER, who died several weeks ago at age 100, was facing a tough economy when his term began in 1977. Meanwhile, the yacht cost $800,000 a year to staff and maintain, making the infamous "floating White House" an unnecessary burden, according to Slate.

Downsizing a large, costly vehicle that was unessential to transportation should not come as a surprise from CARTER.

After all, his presidency was one of the most forward-thinking terms of all time when it came to the environment and energy consumption. For example, he secured the largest preservation of land in the nation's history — over 157 million acres in Alaska — and set ambitious clean energy goals for the time, according to E360.

The exact yacht at the time of CARTER's term was the USS Sequoia, which was first bought during the Herbert Hoover administration in 1931. It was enjoyed by eight presidents, along with foreign leaders, families, and friends during each term, until CARTER sold it in 1977, per Slate.

During its years in action, the boat became the backdrop of many pivotal moments, such as nuclear arms policy talks, war strategy plans, debates with lawmakers, and even a hiding place during scandals, Slate explained.

Trading on the New York Stock Exchange will be closed on Thursday, Jan. 9 for the national day of mourning following the death of former President JIMMY CARTER.

The Nasdaq said it would be closing trading of all U.S. equities and options that day as well. Bond markets will be open, but for reduced hours, closing early at 2 p.m. ET, according to a recommendation from the Securities Industry and Financial Markets Association.

"JIMMY CARTER, with humble roots as a farmer and family man, devoted his life to public service and defending our freedom," Lynn Martin, President of NYSE Group said in a news release.

The last time the New York Stock Exchange closed trading to honor the passing of a former president was in December 2018, when former President George H. W. Bush died.

National day of mourning announced by President Biden

CARTER, the United States' 39th president serving between 1977 and 1981, died on Sunday at the age of 100, prompting President Joe Biden on Sunday to declare Jan. 9 as a national day of mourning.

As part of the declaration, Biden ordered flags to be flown at half-staff starting on Sunday and continuing for the next 30 days. CARTER's official state funeral will be held on Jan. 9 at the Washington National Cathedral in Washington, D.C.

Federal offices will also be closed on Jan. 9 in honor of CARTER's death.

Article 32: Trump's decision to raise flags full-staff during Carter mourning period disrespectful

Article URL:

<https://thesoutherneronline.com/98172/comment/decision-to-raise-flags-to-full-staff-during-presidential-mourning-period-disrespectful-deepens-partisan-divides/>

Processed Text:

President Donald Trump commenced his second term with a disrespectful break of precedent.

On his first day in office, Trump released a proclamation ordering all American flags to be flown at full-staff for presidential inaugurations. This goes against former President Biden's order to fly American flags at the customary half-staff during the 30-day mourning period for former President JIMMY CARTER.

Trump's decision disrespected CARTER and Biden, unnecessarily deepening partisan divides. This decision sets the standard for a chaotic term.

Section four of the U.S. Code states that following the death of a president, the sitting president must order all flags to be flown at half-staff for 30 days. CARTER's passing on Dec. 29 caused the 30 day mourning period to overlap with the 47th inauguration, resulting in all flags to be flown half-staff.

On Jan. 3, Trump shared his frustration with his Truth Social followers, stating that Democrats were 'giddy' the flags would be half-staff during the inauguration.

Biden's proclamation of CARTER's death on Dec. 29 included an order to keep flags at half-staff for 30 days following his death in order to signify the nation's mourning. Despite this order, House Speaker Mike Johnson declared that the American flags at the U.S. Capitol would be flown at full-staff for Trump's inauguration. Following Johnson's decision, several governors ordered all flags to fly at full-staff on Inauguration Day. States including Alabama, Alaska, Arkansas, California and others flew flags at full-staff. Georgia continued to fly flags at half-staff.

While Trump often criticized CARTER, this should be a time of unity and grief across the nation. Shortly after CARTER's passing, Trump denounced CARTER's actions as president during a Jan. 7 speech, claiming CARTER made a "very big mistake" by selling the Panama Canal. Additionally, at a campaign event on CARTER's 100th birthday, Trump disrespected both Biden and CARTER during his speech by saying that Biden was "the worst president," and mockingly stating CARTER is now "the happiest man because CARTER is considered a brilliant president by comparison." By making this joke, Trump diminished both Biden and CARTER's presidential accomplishments.

Flying flags at full-staff undermines the bipartisanship of mourning an American president. Instead of bringing the country together to reflect on CARTER's life as a public servant, Trump decided to politicize CARTER's death. Trump sent a message of disrespect and divide to his supporters by raising the flags at his private Mar-a-Lago club in West Palm Beach just days after CARTER's burial. This further deepens the partisan divides that keep our country fractured and hinder progress.

These decisions turn CARTER's death into a topic of political discussion, rather than national unity, which is both unfair and disrespectful to CARTER's memory. CARTER left a meaningful legacy, negotiating the Camp David Accords, the Panama Canal Treaty and advancements of the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks to limit nuclear capabilities of the U.S. and Soviet Union. These accomplishments were influential to the country's success at preserving international peace, and Trump's unnecessarily critical comments take away from their impact.

Prior to his passing, CARTER made it clear he didn't want Trump in office. He shared with his grandson, Jason CARTER, that he was "only trying to make it to vote for Kamala Harris." But CARTER never directly disrespected Trump. Prior to Trump's first term, CARTER shared that he was "ready to assist the Trump administration," despite their differences. Trump's decision to disrespect CARTER in such an insulting manner was incredibly unfair to CARTER and his loved ones.

Trump's first days in office have already gone against everything CARTER stood for. His initial actions included flying the flag at full-staff on Inauguration Day and pardoning Jan. 6 rioters and implementing harsh immigration policy, among many others. These extreme decisions further highlight Trump's immaturity and irrational decision making skills.

Even Former President Richard Nixon was honorable enough to keep the flag at half-staff during his 1973 inauguration in honor of former President Harry Truman. If Nixon, who was ranked the 12th worst president in American history, was respectful enough to leave the flags at half-staff, that says a lot about the kind of person and politician Trump is.

Trump's actions not only disrespected former Presidents Biden and CARTER, but America as a whole. The decision to fly flags at full-staff on Inauguration Day, even if it overlaps with a period of mourning, is impolite and turns mourning into a topic of unnecessary political discussion.

President-elect Donald Trump was expected to visit the Capitol on Wednesday to pay his respects to former President JIMMY CARTER and meet with Senate Republicans.

U.S. Capitol Police said a man with a machete and three knives was arrested

Wednesday during a security screening for people waiting in line to view former President JIMMY CARTER as he lies in state.

Mel J. Horne, of Washington, D.C., was arrested on multiple charges of carrying a dangerous weapon, Capitol Police said in a news release.

"Horne will be interviewed by USCP investigators to determine his motive," Capitol Police said in the news release. "At this time there is no on-going threat towards the Congress, the U.S. Capitol, or the public."

Horne, 44, was arrested hours before President-elect Donald Trump arrived at the Capitol to pay his respects to CARTER and meet with Senate Republicans. The visit appears to be Trump's first appearance at the Capitol since the Jan. 6, 2021, attack.

CARTER's casket was taken to the Capitol on Tuesday afternoon. He will lie in state through Thursday morning, when a service will be held at Washington National Cathedral.

Capitol Police also said Wednesday that officers arrested a 35-year-old Virginia man who lit a bag containing accelerants on fire on top of his car near the Capitol.

US President-elect Donald Trump said Tuesday he plans to attend the state funeral of former president JIMMY CARTER, who died Sunday aged 100.

Trump shared his intentions with reporters during New Year's Eve celebrations at his Mar-a-Lago residence in Florida.

"I'll be there. We were invited," Trump said.

When asked a follow-up question about whether he had spoken to any of CARTER's family members, the Republican demurred, responding: "I'd rather not say."

CARTER, a Democrat who served one term as US president from 1977 to 1981, voted by mail in the 2024 US presidential election, with family members saying he planned to vote for Trump's opponent, Vice President Kamala Harris.

State funeral plans for CARTER, a one-time peanut farmer who worked his way to the White House, begin Saturday in his home state of Georgia and will conclude January 9 at the Washington National Cathedral, where Trump is expected to attend along with other dignitaries.

President Joe Biden, who will be in his final weeks in office, is expected to deliver the eulogy at the service.

In 2018, after the death of former president George H. W. Bush — who was in office from 1989 to 1993 — Trump attended the state funeral alongside fellow ex-presidents CARTER, Barack Obama and Bill Clinton, as well as their spouses.

Chido Nwangwu in this piece pays tribute to late former United States President, JIMMY CARTER, whose four-year reign in the late 1970s was known for peace.

At President JIMMY CARTER's Nobel Prize Lecture in Oslo on December 10, 2002, he said: "The bond of our common humanity is stronger than the divisiveness of our fears and prejudices. God gives us the capacity for choice. We can choose to alleviate suffering. We can choose to work together for peace. We can make these changes – and we must."

He expressed the importance of peaceful coexistence, respect for human rights, and the value of collaborative relations through the instrumental work of the United Nations and other development organizations.

This truly great man lived and showed that serious leadership and honest commitment to the community, the nation, and the world do not begin and stop when you are elected or appointed to office. After all, he has proven himself to be the greatest former President of the United States.

His life and legacy will be incomplete without his wife, Roselyn CARTER.

He was born on October 1, 1924, and died on December 29, 2024.

The latter was articulated and summarized differently by the late President Ronald Reagan, who defined it as "peace through strength."

What the humanitarian CARTER said about the situation in the world 23 years ago remains largely true: "... instead of entering a millennium of peace, the world is now, in many ways, a more dangerous place. The greater ease of travel and communication has not been matched by equal understanding and mutual respect. There is a plethora of civil wars, unrestrained by rules of the Geneva Convention, within which an overwhelming portion of the casualties are unarmed civilians who have no ability to defend themselves."

CARTER, who turned 100 years two months before his death, was quoted by the AP to have said: "Our country ignored Africa."

He was involved in post-colonial politics in Zimbabwe. He was opposed to apartheid in South Africa. He visited Nigeria on April 1, 1978.

CARTER's foundation has been a leader in healthcare fights against smallpox in Africa.

The legacy and examples of this leader are worthy.

Thanks, President CARTER, the man who waged peace, not war!

When four tornadoes spawned by Hurricane Milton tore through Palm Beach County last October, FEMA arrived shortly thereafter to render assistance. From Wellington and The Acreage to Palm Beach Gardens and Jupiter Farms, the agency swept in behind local first responders to support disaster recovery efforts and channel federal relief dollars to those in need.

The assistance was just the latest instance in Palm Beach County and Florida – and nationwide – in which the agency created by President JIMMY CARTER in 1979 has come to the rescue of tens of thousands of homeowners devastated by natural disasters.

So, one can only imagine the ex-president, whose recent funeral our latest president attended, rolling in his grave at President Donald Trump's suggestion that the Federal Emergency Management Agency be disbanded.

Yet there was Trump a few days later, telling a gaggle of reporters that, just as CARTER created the agency by executive order, he would now "begin the process of fundamentally reforming and overhauling FEMA," or, he added casually, "maybe getting rid of it."

President Donald Trump's "Unleashing American Energy" executive order directly attacks the chief reason for the nation's inability to permit major projects expeditiously, including those seeking to develop domestically available energy and minerals: the National Environmental Policy Act.

Signed on Inauguration Day, in a section titled "Unleashing Energy Dominance through Efficient Permitting," the executive order revokes an NEPA order signed by former President JIMMY CARTER in 1977, which the nation's second-highest federal court ruled late last year exceeded his statutory authority.

Thus, Trump restored Congress's intent when it enacted the NEPA in 1969 by directing the White House Council on Environmental Quality to issue guidance implementing the statute, revoke conflicting Council on Environmental Quality NEPA regulations, coordinate the development of consistent agency-level NEPA regulations to "expedite permitting approvals and meet [statutory] deadlines," and ensure agencies "prioritize efficiency and certainty over any other objectives."

If Beyoncé wins 9 awards, Cowboy CARTER will surpass Santana's Supernatural as the most awarded album in Grammy history (currently holds the record with 9 wins in 2000).

If Beyoncé wins at least 8 Grammys, she will tie Michael Jackson (1984) and Santana (2000) for the most Grammys won in a single night.

With 32 Grammys already, Beyoncé could extend her record as the most awarded artist in Grammy history—with 11 nominations, she could potentially reach 43 Grammy wins.

If Beyoncé wins Album of the Year for Cowboy CARTER, she will finally remove her record as the most nominated female artist in the category without a win (5 previous nominations: I Am... Sasha Fierce, Beyoncé, Lemonade, Renaissance, and Cowboy CARTER).

If Beyoncé wins Record of the Year for Texas Hold 'Em, she will erase her current record as the most nominated artist in the category without a win (9 nominations).
